SENIOR CLASS BOOK

JANUARY 1940

ANDREW JACKSON HIGH SCHOOL

ST. ALBANS QUEENS

RALPH W. HALLER PRINCIPAL

VOLUME TWO NUMBER ONE

We have chosen "This Modern Age" as the theme of the Senior Class Book for January 1940 because the Senior Class of January 1940 will enter into a world that is just that—a Modern Age.

More changes have occurred in the last one hundred years in science, transportation, communication, our social and economic life than in all the centuries before. Raymond D. Fosdick emphasizes one aspect of this truth when he says in his essay "The New Civilization": "Nothing swifter than a horse was known to either Nebuchadnezzar or Thomas Jefferson. A letter sent by Napoleon from Paris to Rome took as long to deliver as one sent by Julius Caesar from Rome to Paris."

All the developments in this modern age have not always been forward steps in the advance of civilization. We hail the airplane as a godsend in times of distress when it is needed to carry serum or transport the injured, but this same airplane that carries the serum or the broken body of a man to a hospital can be used to bomb innocent civilians and urban populations. Chemistry produces medicines to relieve human sickness and suffering; chemistry also creates poison gas and high explosives which cause excruciating pain to and horrible mutilation of human beings.

The problem seems to be this: Are these technological advances which have been made, and are being made, going to be used for the benefit of humanity, or are they going to be used toward the destruction of mankind?

There exist in the world today enough machines, man power, and brain power to bring forth on this earth an abundance of the good things of life; there also exist in the world today enough machines, man power, and brain power to wipe civilization as we know it off the face of the earth. Is there enough character and moral power in the world to control the potentialities of human beings and machines and use them only for the enrichment of human life?

THIS MODERN AGE

Mr. Haller's Message

The closing period of your high school career is coincident with a world situation which will go down in history as one into which momentous and significant events have been crowded with unprecedented rapidity.

However unfortunate and disquieting these conditions may appear, they offer opportunities by which you can profit, if you will.

You have seen hatred, bias, and intolerance dominate and direct the kaleidoscopic events abroad. Amid the confusion, the uncertainty, the haziness, and the contradictions which have characterized world events, I hope you have developed above all else a measure of ability for deliberative, reflective, and cautious thinking. Not to jump at conclusions, but to gather facts and to be reasonably certain of their accuracy before arriving at any judgment; not to allow prejudice or emotion to color your decisions, nor to permit bias, hatred, and intolerance to crowd reason and common sense from your thinking; and to have the courage of honest convictions—these are invaluable lessons for you to have learned.

Remember that enthusiasm for a cause, or violent emotional opposition to it, may warp your judgment. It was David Lloyd George who once said, "All vengeance is unbalanced. Every vindictive man or woman is partly insane."

Throughout your school years, the aim of your teachers has been the development of an ability for straight, sound, honest, valid thinking. The period of international unrest in which your Andrew Jackson career closes has afforded a most unusual opportunity for the exercise and development of this ability. I sincerely hope that you have turned the opportunity to best advantage.

Beauty in This Modern Age

By Marianne Freundlich

This Modern Age has tended to give us of the rising generation the idea that beauty is unimportant in life, and that making money as quickly as possible should take the place of almost everything else. Many of us have forgotten that the desire for beauty lives within us whether we know of it or not, and are only reminded of it on the rare occasions when we seem to forget our petty little ego before the glory of a winter sunset, the majestic arch of a shimmering rainbow, or a star-studded August sky. At such times we lose the self-conscious fear of admitting that we can be impressed by something outside of, and possibly beyond, money-making. As soon as we reawaken to the world around us, however, as soon as we remember that we are living in the Modern Age of hard facts, mass production, and speed, we apologize to ourselves for the momentary lapse from what we consider "reality" and withdraw back to the shell of materialistic insensibility.

Many of us find no use for music, but that is no cause for thinking that such ones have no sense of beauty. It may be buried a little more deeply in such people, attuned to different harmonies, perhaps, than those of the great masters of the past. Two people's tastes may differ, their conception of beauty in sound may vary, but they both know beauty, and there is none who can rightly say that one or the other is wrong. Beauty is measured by different standards. One person may find the greatest enjoyment in symphonies or color; another, in rhapsodies of sound, but both are beauty in that they appeal to the innate sense in the soul of every individual which is his means of appreciating the harmonious, no matter what form it may take.

Some one once spoke of "the Good, the True, the Beautiful," as being of the greatest importance in life, but what are these three but variations of that "elan" within us which prompts all our actions which are above the animal! Were it not for our minds, we should be no more than beasts, driven by hunger and desire to fill the primitive needs of the body. But our minds, our souls, our higher emotions, our power of reasoning—the facilities which give us the capacity to enjoy the beauties of nature, of flowers and of birds, of sun and wind and sea—they are the causes of our greatest joys and triumphs.

I have found beauty in music which is man-made, though inspired by what must be a divine power, and I have found it in the songs of

The Modern Age

By Marshall Cochran

We are living today in a world torn by strife, weakened by an economic upheaval of major consequence, confronted by complex internal difficulties. This ailing world, according to the Bard of Avon, is a vast stage. Take a moment out of the mist of time. It is three o'clock, the afternoon of Saturday, November 4, 1939. While seventy-six thousand frenzied Americans watch Notre Dame defeat Army on the gridiron, a French infantry lieutenant is glancing at a maze of gauges. He is deep in the protective catacombs of the Maginot Line. His ears ring not with collegiate cheers, but with the ceaseless, pulsating rhythm of heavy pumps. The clock on the wall reads 9:00 P.M. Central European Time. At the moment Harry Stevenson of Notre Dame goes over for a touchdown, Private Tarushi Kurishui is emerging from the shadows of the Kobe railway station. A seasoned, worn veteran of the Chinese "incident," he glances at the Police Prefecture clock. It is five o'clock of the morning of Sunday, November 5th. Thus the American football fan, the French lieutenant, and the Japanese private play their humble roles in the pageant of living. The cast of two billion squirming organisms called men has its full complement of heroes and villains, saints and sinners. Its run would make "Abie's Irish Rose" or "Tobacco Road" blush for shame. It has been playing to capacity audiences since the first dim echoes of human existence.

We living Americans are not in the audience. The audience is made up of all those who have "gone West." It is our duty to see that the hero, Humanitarian Progress, gets the center of the stage which at the present time is being "hogged" by those arch-villains, War and Hatred.

To get rid of these twin-devils we must become cognizant of the fact that the true citadel of peace and democracy is the moral consciousness and fiber of each individual and not the material assurance of eight inch super-tensile turret steel. Everlasting peace must be based on the reestablishment of the individual as an influencing entity in this material scheme of things. We must reaffirm the dignity of the human spirit. Man is in the last analysis the fundamental unit of our social structure as the atom is the basic unit of material existence.

Moral consciousness must catch up with technological advances. There will be war as long as two mortals remain unless individuals are taught how to get along with their fellow men with a minimum of friction.

Therefore, our task is two-fold. First we must cure the spirit of defeatism and impotency of the average person by showing the individual that he is a vital force for peace and orderly progress. Secondly, we must unite these separate individualities with others to form a structure which will be a potent force in shaping affairs because its primary strength is the person himself.

We are stepping into a man-sized undertaking, a problem that would sorely try the patience of even Job and the muscles of Hercules. We must endeavor to reconcile the undeviating precision of the machine with recognized frailties of human character. Let no one living deny the enormity of this undertaking. It will test to the utmost our native fortitude and individual character besides giving ample play to the pioneer instinct within us.

bird and waterfall. I have found it in color—in the fields and in the sky, in the ocean and in the granite sand as well as in the tempestuous paintings of Gauguin and the beatific smile of Raphaelian Madonna. I have found beauty in the swift glide of a young girl on skates, in the silver-gray sheets of rain beating down on a deserted country road; I have found it in the majesty of New York's skyline and in the humble silhouette of my home against the purple and orange evening sky, in the smell of dinner on a Sunday evening, and in the fragrance and softness of soap on my hands. Beauty is everywhere and all-pervading in this age as in the past. It is the greatest reality; it is Truth; it has the power to create happiness and joy, a feeling of the divine in and about us, and thus it is good.

Let us seek beauty wherever we are so that we may remember that we are made to enjoy and not forget the divine spark in each of us over the drudgery of our daily tasks. If we seek long enough, we shall some day understand that life is full of beauty.

Let us not despair if we do not see beauty as others do. Whatever seems beautiful to me is beautiful though others may see beauty in its opposite. We are both right.

The important thing is to remember that in this Modern Age, Beauty is as important as ever, that in speeding up our living we must not skip over the beautiful, for living to be enjoyable must have room for enjoyment, and where, if not in a true appreciation and recognition of the beautiful, can that be found? Life is full, but never too full for the enjoyment of Beauty and is perhaps never really full without it.
